

A balance of historical proportions.

Established with great support from Ohio's government and business community, The Freedom Center celebrates courage, cooperation and perseverance, woven through the historic legacy of America's struggle to abolish slavery and secure freedom for all people. The state's central role in the Underground Railroad and its history of welcoming diversity make Ohio the ideal location.

JOHN PEPPER'S STORY

"History is a great teacher. I have learned many valuable lessons in Ohio."

John Pepper
Chairman and CEO, Retired
Procter & Gamble Company
Co-chairman, Board of Directors
National Underground
Railroad Freedom Center

John Pepper has always believed that by applying the lessons we learn from the past, we can improve the future. It's a perspective that served him well in his successful career at Procter & Gamble and in his personal life.

Founded in 1837, P&G itself has a long, storied history in Ohio. It was 1963 when John, a native of Pennsylvania and a graduate of Yale, joined the company. Following a series of management assignments, he became president in 1986 and CEO and chairman in 1995.

During his tenure, John was most impressed by Ohio's progressive leadership, dedicated to improving the lives of its citizens. He found a well-rounded living environment that provided the opportunity for professional and personal balance other metropolitan areas simply cannot provide.

Since retiring from P&G, John enjoys spending time with his family, and he satisfies his passion for history through the newly opened National Underground Railroad Freedom Center. John spearheaded the Center's $100 million capital campaign and now serves on the Board of this renowned national institution.

John Pepper could live anywhere in the world, but has found the perfect balance in Ohio, personally and professionally. Find your balance at OhioMeansBusiness.com. Or call 1-877-466-4551.
